Volunteers needed for city's boards, commissions

May 24, 2016 - Hampton is looking for volunteers interested in filling vacancies on many of the more than two dozen board and commissions that provide community input and support to the city - including the Wetlands Board, which reviews applications for using or developing any wetlands in the city.

Whether they're promoting the history of the first Africans to land in North America, hearing concerns about property assessments, working with City Council on civic engagement or advising officials on services for the handicapped, our boards and Commissions play a vital role in Hampton.

Not sure how you can help? Visit www.hampton.gov/boards to learn about all of the boards and commissions in the city - from the Animal Control Advisory Committee to the Youth Commission, where Hampton's teenagers get a chance to be heard. Then go ahead and fill out an application online at <http://www.hampton.gov/index.aspx?NID=2999>.

All board and commission members are appointed by City Council and serve varying terms based on the board or commission they serve on. For more information, go to www.hampton.gov/boards.
